The second volume in Seribner, Armstrong & Co.'s Bries. Brac series is just out. Like the first, it is prettily bound and printed, and also like the first, it is full of interest. Thackeray and Dickens are the heroes of this volume. No other book yet published contains so many authentic memorials of Thackeray, a "life" of the great so wellst having not yet appeared. The stories of Dickens are gathered from every quarter except the Forster biography.
This is just the book for desultory summer reading, and we are not surprised to learn that the series is proving a marked success.

of fashion, is very much mistaken. To be sure it is a long time since the harp through Tara's halls the soul of mustic shed, but that delightful sid instrument still lives. There is a place on Houston street in this city where harps are manufactured, and it is, I believe the only place of the kind in this country. In the first place it makes a rich accompaniment to he voice and in the second, it displays a beautiful hand and arm to such advantage, The harp is an expensive instrument, rang-ing in price from $350 to $1,000. Those that sell at $250, are single action instruments, that is, they can only be played in one key. The double action harps are of course the more desirable and also the more expensive; the average price, however, is about the harp that we miss in other instruments, unless it is the violin, it is a
